Jordan to reopen airports to 'low risk' countries in August

Jordan will reopen its airports to commercial flights next month after a near five-month shutdown imposed to stem the spread of the coronavirus, an official said Sunday. Civil aviation commission Chief Haitham Misto told state television that flights from 22 "low risk" countries will be allowed from August 5. The countries listed by the health ministry include Austria, Canada, China, Denmark, Georgia, Germany, Greenland, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Malaysia, New Zealand, Switzerland and Thailand, according to AFP. Travellers from those countries will not need to be isolated for 14 days when they reach Jordan but must be tested for the virus before arriving, Misto said, adding that the list would be updated every two weeks.

Qatar Chamber of Commerce hails Jordan's 'encouraging' investment environment

The business and investment environment in Jordan is "encouraging", President of the Qatar Chamber of Commerce and Industry Sheikh Khalifa Bin Jassim Al Thani said on Sunday. During an interview in Doha with the Jordan News Agency, Petra, Sheikh Khalifa said that commercial and investment relations between Qatar and Jordan are "solid and growing", expecting further growth in several economic sectors. He said that Jordan enjoys several investment-attracting features, which reflect positively on attracting foreign capitals, mainly in the ease of doing business, freedom to transfer profits and the incentives granted to investors.

International flights will resume on August 5 with set rules

International flights will resume on August 5 and airports are ready to receive international passengers, according to Civil Aviation Regulatory Commission (CARC) Chief Commissioner Captain Haitham Misto.

Transport Minister Khaled Saif announced on Sunday that the government is attempting to start flights with 22 countries in the green zone in regard to COVID-19, with ongoing diplomatic discussion between the Foreign Ministry and those countries to start inbound and out-bound flights with them.
